La Fajana lies at an altitude of 700 m, one kilometre from Los Canarios along the LP-2 main road towards Las Indias. Together with El Charco it is the smallest district of the municipality, with a few dozen residents: a cluster of houses beside the road, with a small square with a children's playground and fine views of the San Antonio volcano. Every 3 May its cross is decorated with greenery.

Just past the village is the Mirador de Las Indias viewpoint, renovated in 2026 with a décima poem and a sculpture, with a picnic area and views of the south-west coast and of El Hierro. In the district's park there is an eagle carved in Canary pine wood by the sculptor Juanito, from Los Quemados. Above, at 800 m, at the crossroads between La Fajana, Los Canarios, Los Quemados and Las Indias, grows the Pino de Santo Domingo, a Canary pine between 350 and 400 years old with its own recreation area.

From La Fajana the old fishermen's and shepherds' path descends, which municipal Route 2 follows to Las Indias and La Zamora beach. See also: Mirador de Las Indias.
